

6. Referral process

Introduction

To ensure optimum management of acutely ill patients it is important that the process of referral from the ward for critical care is well managed. This should allow timely referral of patients likely to benefit from critical care admission and should also minimise referral of patients for whom intensive care is thought to be inappropriate. These are difficult decisions and consultant involvement in the referral process is essential.